Extra activities

COURSE OF TERRITORIAL INFORMATION SYSTEMS IN THE NEW UNIVERSITY BUILDING IN EDOLO

Prof. Giulio Senes of the Agricultural Engineering Institute of Università degli Studi di Milano will hold a 28-hour Course on Territorial Information Systems.

AIMS

The Course aims to provide the future graduate of the Protection and Enhancement of the Mountain Territory and Environment Course with knowledge of the methods and techniques required for planning, setting up and managing Territorial Information Systems using information technology (in particular regarding the physical planning of the mountain territory). The course therefore will provide the necessary basic notions of traditional cartography as well as dealing with GIS (Geographical Information Systems). The use of these systems will be the subject of a specific workshop.

CONDITIONS AND ENROLMENT

The course is open only to undergraduate students of the Protection and Enhancement of the Mountain Territory and Environment Course. Please see the course programme for specific conditions.
All participants must enrol by 29th January 2009.

WHERE

The course will take place in the I.T. laboratory of the new University Building in Edolo.

21st January 2009: "IMPACT OF HUMAN ACTIVITIES IN THE ALPINE ENVIRONMENT: RISKS AND DETERIORATION OF NATURAL RESOURCES".

The seminar "Impact of human activities in the Alpine environment: risks and deterioration of natural resources", which will last 6 hours, will take place in the Main Hall of the Edolo Campus on Wednesday 21st January 2009 from 9.30am.

Dott. Enrico Casati, freelance expert, will explain, using real cases as a basis, the main problems of various forms of hydrogeological instability in the alpine environment : floods, mass movements, surface erosion. Attention will be given to the spontaneous dynamics of the main geomorphological agents active (water courses, gravity and surface water) and on the processes of landscape formation, highlighting the connection between human activity (agricultural, industrial, building) so as to be able to define the concept of hydrogeological risk and its qualitative assessment.

The seminar is free and open to the public.

If you wish to take part you must register with the Edolo Campus Secretary's Office

19th FEBRUARY 2009: UP IN THE MOUNTAINS

On 19th February 2009 at 4pm Walter Fornasa, Professor of Environmental Psychology and Development Ecology at the Università degli Studi di Bergamo, will hold the seminar "Up in the mountains".

During the seminar he will be presenting the main concepts concerning Environmental Psychology and their connection with the ecology of lifestyles and contexts. In particular he will be examining the relationship between ecosystems and ways of thinking, the network of relationships which connect us with the world, the problem of changing long-established habits and the issue of environmental education, with reference to the contribution which can be made by those working in sectors regarding the environment in order to improve a "sustainable culture of the environment".

Mountains cultures are, in this sense, a stimulating and promising "laboratory" of ecological history as a "pedagogy of the environment and of biodiversity".

The seminar is free and open to the public. We look forward to seeing you.
